

PREPARATION FOR "D" DAY 6 JUNE '44

In March 1944 75 Squadron was involved in another low-level job, listed merely as "SPECIAL OPERATIONS". Everyone was now aware of the build up to a possible invasion of Europe, & altho Bomber Harris' (Chief of Bomber Cnd) was still trying to smash Germany's industrial heartland, he had also to divert his attention to pre-invasion tasks. This included hitting railway systems, road bridges & other links of communication. On 13.03.44 meaning of German resistance movement in France had to be supplied with the tools to demolish rail and road traffic. 75 (Reece Jones) - Baker - Gardner. "Special Operations".

On the night of 13 March 1944 16 Stirlings from the Squadron went back to mining going to St Nazaire, Lorient, La Rochelle & Brest. One returned early, crashed at Castle Coombe, & was burnt out but none of the crew was injured. (altho the C.O. flying with them hurt his leg climbing over a gate as they ran from the aircraft over a field).

Blackbird of Cornwall 0726/6383

PREPARATION FOR "D" DAY 6 JUNE '44

In March 1944 75 Squadron was involved in another low-level job, listed merely as "SPECIAL OPERATIONS". Everyone was now aware of the build up to a possible Invasion of Europe, & altho "Bomber Harris" (Chief of Bomber Cmd) was still trying to smash Germany's Industrial heartland, he had also to divert his attention to pre-invasion tasks. This included hitting railway systems, road bridges & other lines of communication vital to the Germans on the continent. Meanwhile the active Resistance movements in France had to be supplied now more than ever before with the tools to help with the demolition of rail and road traffic. 75 Sqdn. was asked to assist in dropping supplies of explosives & weapons to the various Resistance Groups - "Special Operations".

On the night of 13 March 1944 16 Stirlings from the Squadron went back to mining going to St Nazaire, Lorient, La Rochelle & Brest. One returned early, crashed at Castle Coombe, & was burnt out but none of the crew was injured. (Altho the C.O. flying with them hurt his leg climbing over a gate as they ran from the aircraft over a field).