

OPINION

THE OPERA

From Capt. C. V. JAGGARD,
R. Ryburn, C.M.P.

VOLTAIRE said that the English had a hundred religion and only one man; it would be equally true to say that the Italians have, negatively, a hundred opinions but only one common sense, and that was the daily hackneyed Verdi, always for so many years of the Carlotta, leaving company in England.

I've never seen more Italian sentiment, and one who, after several weeks near Florence, and hence in Rome and Naples, have I been able to see his O.M.C. As for our countrymen (the O.M.C. I have not met), they do not act. Admittedly, the O.M.C. now is in the way of the Italian people, and, possibly, could they see with the music, dance, and what about the Italian people (the O.M.C. I have not met), they do not act. Admittedly, the O.M.C. now is in the way of the Italian people, and, possibly, could they see with the music, dance, and what about the Italian people (the O.M.C. I have not met), they do not act.

The usual defense for the disapproval of Italian sentiment is that these are the opera which the comparatively uneducated British public like to go. I think that the direction has given an interesting British taste. It's quite true that there are very many who stay away from the opera, but the things I have seen, both in the theater and in the way that the opera is presented, are in an effective.

GROWING PAIN

From C. G. KAUFMAN, R.E.
C.M.P.

WITH a growing fear for the future, I read the news of the collapse of the economy and the overwhelming of government by the occupying Powers.

There is the struggle of the European nations for the independence and restoration of national rights and frontier lines.

Britain awaits the results of the General Election

It's okay—your vote's quite safe

The secrecy of the ballot is the fundamental principle of British democracy. And this article and these pictures prove that there is no fiddle.

THE recent General Election made history. For the first time, ballot papers were not counted immediately after polling ceased, because the victory of the Labour Party was so certain that the results were not in doubt.

There is the story of the ballot paper from the moment when, as a relatively unimportant white slip, it was delivered to the polling station, later to take on the role of a vote in the hands of the elector.

If you had been in Chesham Town Hall the day before the General Election, you might have met Mr. Derek Mather, the Town Clerk, going down in the lift to the very large box called "the box."

And you would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand.

With a key in his hand, he would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand.

With a key in his hand, he would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand.

With a key in his hand, he would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand.

With a key in his hand, he would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand.

With a key in his hand, he would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand.

With a key in his hand, he would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand.

With a key in his hand, he would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand.

With a key in his hand, he would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand.

With a key in his hand, he would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand.

With a key in his hand, he would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand.

With a key in his hand, he would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand.

With a key in his hand, he would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand.

With a key in his hand, he would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand.

With a key in his hand, he would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand. And you would have seen him with a key in his hand.

Three blasts on the policeman's whistle close the polling at Chesham.

Sealed ballot boxes will wait in the strong-room until to-morrow.

Pollsmen everywhere... they count the ballots in the strong hall and watch the unloading of the ballot boxes.

...and behind it so that the ballot could not be seen; but it had to be dropped into the ballot box in view of the Polling Officer.

Throughout the day he could see the ballot box being loaded into the strong room, and he could see the ballot box being loaded into the strong room, and he could see the ballot box being loaded into the strong room.

Ballot box by door on arrival of the elector.

Describe the scene: the elector stands in front of the ballot box, and the Polling Officer, who is standing behind the ballot box, watches the elector.

In many cases, the elector is not allowed to see the ballot box until he has put his vote in it. The Polling Officer, who is standing behind the ballot box, watches the elector.

On the day of the count, Mr. Mather will be at the head of the queue, and he will be at the head of the queue, and he will be at the head of the queue.

There will be a search of the ballot box, and the Polling Officer will be at the head of the queue, and he will be at the head of the queue.

And then, after the count, the Polling Officer will be at the head of the queue, and he will be at the head of the queue, and he will be at the head of the queue.
